Undergraduate Internship Opportunity

Applications are now open for our fantastic (and well-paid) paid summer internships in plant & microbial ecology, art/design, computer science, biogeochemistry, conservation policy, history, engineering, etc.

Depending on the project, students will conduct field and lab-work in old-growth forests, historical archives, art/design studios and museums, biogeochemistry labs, long-term forest study plots, data-rich computer environments, at the Harvard Farm and even at Henry David Thoreau's cabin site at Walden.

Participants work closely with a faculty mentor and live on-site in our beautiful farmhouse dorm. In addition to their research, students attend career panels, evening workshops, seminars and field trips.

We welcome applications from students at any U.S. college, community college or university.

Please broadcast widely to any undergraduates!
