

Climate Change and Social Justice

Tuesday, April 18, 2017

1:00 pm - Baker Center Reading Room

In celebration of Earth Day 2017, Dr. Lisa Reyes Mason, Assistant Professor in the College of Social Work, will share her views on climate change and the many ways it is impacting society and social justice.

Dr. Mason received her PhD and MSW from the Brown School of Social Work at Washington University in St. Louis and her BA from the University of Pennsylvania. Her research examines social vulnerability and adaptation to problems at the nexus of society and the environment such as climate change, water security, urban pollution, and severe weather. Dr. Mason's research is multidisciplinary and community engaged. She collaborates regularly with colleagues in Engineering and Geography.

Join us for a great discussion.

Free & Open to the Public

